Hero Card Raffle Winner Rachel Lance's Proactivity Rewarded

Petra Wehle posted on Oct 17, 2016

One day Rachel Lance noticed that the floor of a heavily used elevator had developed a tripping hazard, so she reported it to a safety professional and it was promptly fixed. Several months later a colleague overheard her talk about that incident, just happened to remember the Hero Card in his wallet More>

Safety Culture Work Group Initiative: Temporary Safety Messages in Neon Chalk

Petra Wehle posted on Sep 30, 2016

You may have noticed the temporary neon-colored safety messages popping up in high traffic areas. They are the invention of a Berkeley Lab Safety Culture Work Group subcommittee whose task it was to create awareness around slip, trip, and fall prevention. The stenciling campaign involved brainstorming for catchphrases such as "Handrails, There for a Reason," "Get a Grip," and "A fall, a slip, a hospital trip." Those ended up in the recycle bin, More>

Microwave Oven Safety Tips

Petra Wehle posted on Jul 29, 2016

Practically everyone at the lab uses a microwave oven to heat something – maybe lunch or snack in the common kitchen, or perhaps a liquid or media in a dedicated laboratory microwave. Several times a day even, we place a container in the microwave, press a few buttons and presto – it's done! What could go wrong with something that simple? More>
